It appears from an advertisement in Saturday's Gazette that the Government have decided to establish a jinricksha farm in the colony, and tenders for the new monopoly are requested. A pretty keen competition for the Ricksha Farm may be expected, judging by the eagerness with which licences have been sought under the present system, and the probability is that the revenue from this source will be largely increased. In all likelihood the new mede of dealing with the ricksha traffic in the trouble than the licensing system, and the convenience of the public should not suffer in any way from the change. There has 41 019 126, and the expenditure to you always been more or less favouritism and wire-pulling in connection with the present system, the applicants for licences being invariably very much in excess of the number of licences allowed to be issued, and by doing away with this the disposal of the monopoly to the highest bidder will have good effect.

PRAIN CEYLON,—Planting returns in Ceylon show an increase during the past year of about 30,000 acres in the area under tea. It is estimated that, allowing for clearings to be planted during the monsoon, nearly a quarter of a million acres will be devoted o tea cultivation at the close of the present year. This announcement is in itself satisfactory from the point of view of the Caylon planter, but it is compled unfortunately with the news of a steady fall in prices on the London market. Local authorities in Ceylon prefer to attribute this phenomenon to over-production, but experts in London have another and far more serious explanation. However wellfounded may have been the good repute of Ceylon tea in the past, the planters are sacrifice quality to quantity, and there is no little danger, if this present policy be maintained, that the produce of the island and that over-production is responsible for the very rapid fall which has lately taken place, the prospect for the coming year leaves something to be desired.

Albert Victor of Wales is becoming prematurely bald. We do not know that a little baldness is to be regarded as a misfortune in a personage in his position. It gives an appearance of regal nobility and liberal breadth of brow which, even if fictitious, may inspire 'a frotful realm with awe.' It may invest him with a gravity and an anthoritative dignity of deportment far beyond his years. But eyen if the story be true, let us point out that his Royal Highness is, after all, merely suffering from a complaint which is becoming so very common among the youth of our time that it suggested some of Mr Darwin's most ingenious speculations, and has quite recently been the subject of eager scientific controversy, echoes of which are still reverberating in the learned societies. Dr Tyson has rather startled the world by attempting with much plausibility to show that there is an extraordinary increase in premature baldness among our young mon as compared with young women, and there is reason to think he has been strongly influenced by Mr Darwin's theory that baldness is simply a sex-mark in the European According to the long detailed reports male—that it is merely part of the general about the German Emperor's visit to Eng. process of depilation which marks the land which appeared in the German Press, evolution of the hairy ape into the hairthe correspondents were much 'enchanted' less human being.
